

ECTS

All modules in University of Galway are specified in terms of ECTS.

ECTS (European Credit Transfer and Accumulation System) is a student-centred system based on the average student workload required to achieve the learning outcomes at the end of a programme of study.

It is important to consider the ECTS and expected student effort required when designing or redesigning modules and programmes

Student Workload

Student workload, in terms of ECTS, consists of the time required to complete all learning activities, such as attending lectures, seminars, independent and private study, group work, project work, examinations, work placements and so forth.

These are notional hours of total student effort – in practice there will be variation in subjects and in students in terms of how much time and effort they need to learn something.

There is no direct link between contact hours and credits. It is, however, important to maintain reasonable contact with students over the course of a period of study, and a minimum number of contact hours per 5/10 ECTS module may be specified by individual schools or colleges.

ECTS in University of Galway

Typically, 1ECTS= 20-25 hours of total student effort.

Obtaining ECTS

ECTS (credits) can only be obtained after successful completion of the work required and appropriate assessment of the learning outcomes achieved. Student effort alone does not guarantee the award of ECTS.

Credits are allocated to all education components of a study programme (such as modules, courses, placements, dissertation work, etc.).

In Summary

A semester in University of Galway is comprised of 15 weeks. This includes 12 weeks teaching and self-study time, exam study and exam weeks.

A full-time student is expected to commit to approximately 40 hours of academic effort per week for the duration of a semester or academic year.

There is no direct link between ECTS and contact hours.

* Some postgraduate courses are year-long courses, including a summer semester. These courses are typically 90 ECTS.
