Welcome

I would like to welcome all third and final year BA Joint-Honors (Political Science and Sociology) undergraduates and returning students to University of Galway for the 2025/26 academic year.

I hope that you will all enjoy your course in Politics and Sociology, as well as the cultural and social activities that University of Galway and the city of Galway have to offer. I encourage you to take part in as many of the activities of the University as possible. Join clubs and societies and take part in activities; it is by doing this that you can really connect with the University experience and make the most of your time here. Learn about the Community Knowledge Initiative and find out about the various volunteering opportunities available to you.

As you near the completion of your undergraduate studies, I encourage you to take this important time to reflect on your future aspirations and explore the wide range of opportunities available to you—whether through postgraduate education, professional development programs, or entry into the workforce aligned with your academic and personal goals. I am happy to meet with you and discuss these options.

Most of the teaching takes place in person, on campus. Attend all your lectures and seminars and take part actively. As you progress through your final year of undergraduate study, you will have gained valuable insight into your strengths, preferences, and identity as a learner; recognizing that each individual navigates this important stage in their own unique way, please know that I am here to support and guide you throughout your learning journey, offering assistance to help you achieve your academic and personal goals.

This handbook gives you the key information about your course. Please read pages 1-10, and the information concerning your year of study, carefully.

My office hours are Wednesdays 12-1pm, please do not hesitate to call in (room 304, Áras Moyola). I am also contactable by e-mail at Jacqueline.murphy@universityofgalway.ie

Best of luck in academic year 25/26!

Important Information

1. Academic Calendar Dates

Here you will find a list of important upcoming dates for the 25/26 academic year, including; study weeks, exam dates, holidays, etc.: Academic Term Dates - University of Galway.

2. Attendance

It is the duty of a student to attend every scheduled lecture/tutorial and to undertake other academic activities (such as essay assignments, laboratory classes, project work, seminars, tutorials etc.) as required in each of the subjects, unless prevented by some unavoidable cause of absence. Students, therefore, are strongly recommended to attend all module lectures and tutorials. In the case of the latter, without weekly participation (i.e. by keeping up with the prescribed or recommended readings and by making a contribution to class discussion) it is highly unlikely that students will produce work of a standard expected from small-group teaching and learning.

3. Canvas

Canvas is a Virtual Learning Environment (VLE). A VLE is a web-based application designed to facilitate lecturers in the management of modules for their students, especially by helping lecturers and learners with course administration. A VLE is used to supplement face-to-face lectures and tutorials. Learn all about Canvas here.

4. Referencing

The School of Political Science and Sociology advises that students must use the Harvard (UL) Referencing Style for all assignments and essays. Details on the Harvard (UL) referencing style, and examples, are available from the University of Galway library here.

5. Academic Writing Centre

The Academic Writing Centre \(AWC\) provides one-on-one tutorials and email consultations on essay writing. These are free and available to everyone, regardless of experience or grade average. They are located in the main Library.

6. Academic Integrity Policy

Academic integrity is a fundamental value of any university community. As a principle, it assumes that all student interactions with the academic institution are entered into in the spirit of honesty. This value gives the student responsibility for ensuring that all assignments that they submit for academic purposes are their own work.

7. Disability Support Service (DSS)

Disability support is available to University of Galway students who need support or reasonable accommodations due to the impact of a disability, ongoing physical or mental health condition, or a specific learning difficulty. These supports are provided through DSS. Click here for further information.

8. Exam Support

Student Services have a range of valuable supports on offer to help you both before and during exams. Workshops, helplines and online resources are just some of the many options available and have been developed. Here is a list of useful policies and procedures. You will also find information about exam repeats, appeals, deferrals, past papers, alternative arrangements, etc.

9. Student Enquiry Centre

For any enquiries about student life, services and support, contact the Student Enquiry Centre. You can drop into them on the first floor of the Arts/Science Concourse from 9am-5pm, Monday to Friday. You can also email SEC@universityofgalway.ie.

10. Chaplaincy

The Chaplaincy is here to help students navigate the challenges associated with university life. Don't know who you need to speak to? That's where Chaplaincy comes in. They are available on campus for a chat from Monday - Friday and are here to listen.

11. Counselling

Student Counselling provides a free hybrid service of in-person and online one-to-one counselling. They also provide group counselling and workshops. Seeking counselling is normal here and is not a sign that you are unable to cope, but of strength and resourcefulness. Counselling support about 10% of the student population each year. Any problem, large or small, if unresolved, is welcomed here.

12. Examination and Assessment Process

Student examination and assessment in the University is governed by a set of important policies and processes which outline:

- a) the academic rules which all programmes and modules must comply with for the awarding of degrees and
- b) the way in which exams and assessment are conducted.

The University's degree structure and assessment process is aligned to the European Credit Transfer and Accumulation System to allow for recognition of awards across Europe. Consequently, programmes are structured in multiples of 5 ECTS, with 60 ECTS making up a full year of undergraduate study and 90 ECTS for postgraduate study.

Degree classification is normally based on a student's results in pre-final (30%) and in final (70%) year and degree awards are classified from pass to first class honours. Results are approved by the University's College Exam Boards with independent validation of marks by External Examiners. College Boards, Academic Council and its sub-Committee, Academic Standing Committee are the key decision-making bodies in relation to student examination and assessment.

The School of Political Science and Sociology uses a categorical marking system across all programmes. These categorical marks are applied only at the level of assessed components (and NOT overall modular marks) to foster consistency across the programme and achieve a better distribution of marks across degree grades.

Fail: 0, 25, 35

Pass: 42, 45, 48

Lower Second: 52, 55, 58

Upper Second: 62, 65, 68

First: 72, 75, 78.

13. Extensions and Deferrals

If you are unable to submit your work on time, you must apply to the Module Coordinator or Seminar Leader for an extension no later than 24 hours in advance of an assessment deadline. If granted, the maximum extension will be no more than one week (7 calendar days). This requirement applies to all students, including those with a LENS (Learning Educational Needs Summary) report. If you have extenuating circumstances where more than 7 calendar days are required, the authorisation process depends on the weighting of the piece of assessment:

- Where the module assignments of course work constitutes less than 30% of the overall mark, this will be considered by the Module Coordinator or Seminar Leader in line with the Extenuating Circumstances policy.
- Where the module assignments and coursework constitutes over 30% of the overall mark, you must apply 7 days in advance of the assessment deadline directly to the College of Arts, Social Sciences, and Celtic Studies following the Extenuating Circumstances policy and completing the Extenuating Circumstances form. The extension request must be based upon a medical certificate and/or relevant supporting documentation.

14. Late submission without an extension

For module assignments and work constituting 20% or less of the overall mark: if you submit an assignment after the deadline without submitting an extension request and/or extension request approval, the work will be marked and a penalty will be applied.

- Late submissions will be penalised at a rate of 2 marks per day off the mark originally awarded. (E.g. if the essay merits a mark of 68, and was submitted one day late, the mark will go down to 66).
- No work is accepted or marked if submitted more than 7 working days after the deadline without an extension.

15. Feedback On Assignments

Feedback timeframe policy: normally, assignments will be marked within 3 weeks from the submission deadline.

Feedback from your lecturer/seminar leader is provided through Canvas.

16. Parking Information

There are different types of spaces on campus, including spaces for staff permit holders only, student permit holders only, shared use (staff student permit holders), visitor/non-permit holder pay-and-display/Pay by Phone (P&D) spaces.

You need a permit to park in University of Galway, or you can buy a ticket from P&D machines or Pay by Phone. Please note, that P&D tickets only apply to spaces marked in blue adjacent to the meters - P&D tickets do not allow you to park anywhere else. Permit holders can use P&D spaces, but you must buy a ticket.

Your permit/P&D ticket allows you to park in specific places and you must familiarise yourself with the zones, and which permit applies to what carpark. There are also 'reserved' spaces and loading bays - do not park in these.

You may use the universally accessible parking spaces if you display a valid and registered 'blue badge' permit issued by the IWA.

Student parking permits are available through an online system for registered students. Allow plenty of time on your first visit to campus with your car.

17. Class Representatives

The Class Rep is the Voice of your Class and represents the views of the majority of the class. They help to solve both individual and class-wide problems. If you decide to run for Class Rep, your responsibilities will include communicating between your class and the course lecturers, attending Comhairle Chomhaltas na Mac Léinn and your College Council meetings to help formulate Student Union policies and arranging class parties, hoodies etc.

18. Student Complaints Process

The purpose of the Student Complaints Procedure is to provide a formal mechanism for students to have their complaints heard and resolved. The Procedure is not intended to be a disciplinary one, However, the Complaints Procedure provides students with an opportunity to raise issues of concern to them, frequently makes recommendations for improvements to University processes and, where appropriate, can provide redress to students.

It is intended that this complaints procedure will allow for matters to be dealt with fairly, transparently and in a timely fashion, for the benefit of current and future students and the wider University Community.

Programme Structure: Semester 1

In the final year of the BA, students select modules from a suite of 'semi-core' and 'specialist elective' modules that span the disciplines of Political Science and Sociology.

What is the difference between a 'semi-core' module and a 'specialist elective module'?

The semi-core modules are taught in lecture theatres to large groups of students. These modules offer students an in-depth understanding of society and politics in both the Irish and international contexts. Students are encouraged to critically engage with and explore a range of themes, topics, issues and questions by attending weekly lectures and studying the learning materials provided by the lecturers.

Elective modules are typically taught to small groups of students, enabling students to acquire specialist knowledge in a specific subject area, as well as providing the opportunity for a more active and participatory approach to learning than is possible in the large-group lecture modules.

Semi-core modules are paired, and students select one from each pair. Specialist elective modules are available in semester 2 only.

If you are 3BA1, 4BA4, or BA Connect student taking Sociological and Political Studies as a subject, you are required to take three Semi-Core modules in semester 1. In semester 2 you should register for your choice of modules that does not create a clash in your Schedule.

If you are a BA Government student, or on a Denominated BA programme (e.g. BSS1; 4BYF), you should contact your Programme Director who will advise you on 'required' and 'optional' modules in Soc & Pol.

It is your responsibility to ensure that your Modules Schedule does not clash with your other Subjects. Ensure there is no clash in regard to Day and Time when selecting your module.

For Semester 1, students must register for 3 semi-core modules: ONE from each PAIR below

Module Descriptors

SP404 Development and Change

Lecturers: Su-Ming Khoo

This course is a critical introduction to development studies. It focuses on the meanings of 'development' and the debates surrounding the definition and measurement of 'progress' or 'good change'. We examine the different priorities attached to development efforts, critically challenging mainstream economic growth perspectives with alternative or ethical feminist, humanistic and ecological approaches. In current times of multiple crises and challenges, this course suggests that ideas about global 'progress' matter a lot and urgently need to be debated.

The course opens by discussing four main approaches to 'progress' – economic growth, equality, human rights and capabilities. Economy-focused perspectives are different from ethical or values-based perspectives. The question of sustainability adds a fifth perspective that places limits on progress defined as economic growth, while the question of gender equality pushes us to question what is happening within aggregate populations or countries. The issues illustrate how 'development' involves problems of data and measurement, but also deeply sociological, philosophical and political questions about values, meaning and purpose. Persisting demands for growth are challenged by pressures of inequality, both within and between the societies of the Global South and Global North. We explore these contrasting perspectives on progress through the lenses of three major global issues for policy and public action: agriculture and food, health and security. An issue-based approach enables us to open out debates with evidence and perspectives from Asia, Africa, Latin America, North America and Europe.

The course material invites you to question conventional assumptions about economic and societal progress or 'development'. It also introduces leading actors in global development – which include UN agencies and programmes, governments, notionally 'free' and globalized markets, and non-governmental and grassroots organization. These have different roles and niches in directing policy, organizing social protection and security and protecting and fulfilling rights.

SP3197 Thinking Politically: The Power of Ideas

Lecturers: Allyn Fives

This module explores the practical application of political theory to real-world issues and problems, thereby exploring 'the power of ideas'. Topics include: redistribution of income to benefit the least well off; civil disobedience; resistance against deeply unjust regimes; paternalistic policies to benefit adult citizens; parental power over children; gender equality, LGBTQ+ rights and freedoms; racialisation and racism.

In terms of how the module is organised, it provides an introduction to and overview of some of the key arguments in two of the main approaches to political theory: analytical (e.g. John Rawls, Judith Shklar, Alasdair MacIntyre) & continental (e.g. Michel Foucault, Judith Butler, Saidiya Hartman). By exploring the 'power of ideas', this module highlights an apparent 'incommensurability' between the analytical and continental traditions in political theory, which is important in terms of how we use political theory to both 'think politically' but also 'think critically'. From a standpoint of 'epistemic toleration', motivated in part by an awareness of family resemblances between the traditions, the aim of this module is not to overcome incommensurability, but rather to make students aware of, and encourage their critical analysis of, the two traditions.

SP219 Political Sociology

Lecturer: Niall Ó Dochartaigh

Political sociology examines the social origins and dynamics of political phenomena such as the state, nationalism, political mobilisation and competition, civil war and conflict. Located at the boundary between the disciplines of sociology and political science it focuses in particular on the changing relationship between society and state. This course covers key themes and issues in political sociology, providing an overview of the major debates and perspectives in the field, tracing the changing relationship between state and society in the modern era. It provides an introduction to both classical and contemporary issues in political sociology and reviews the leading theoretical and historical approaches in the field in a way that illustrates theory with concrete empirical work and case studies. The course explores how the nation-state became the dominant form of political organisation in the modern world and why it persists; why nationalism is such a powerful political and social force; why people get involved—and stay involved—in political parties and social movements; how civil wars break out and why people take up arms; how governments maintain their legitimacy and why it matters; the changing nature of warfare and its role in shaping societies and states; and the changing character of politics in the Information Age.

SP3195 Equality, Diversity & Collective Action

Lecturers: Danielle Kennan

In this module, students will have the opportunity to deepen knowledge on, and engage with, contemporary issues of diversity and equality advocacy. Students will explore the kinds of social movements and collective activism that have driven, shaped or challenged human rights internationally, taking a 'bottom-up' approach. Case studies will be used for in-depth exploration of tensions between equality and diversity and to examine the forms, functions and outcomes of collective action in relation to the cases considered. Students will be assessed through a combination of mid-term assignment and a final written exam.

The module examines the basic American policy-making system, contemporary public opinion and voting behaviour, and the election of Donald Trump in 2016 and his defeat in 2020. The module will also examine pressing contemporary issues such as race-relations, gun violence, economic inequality, concerns about the election process, and America's changing position in the world economically and politically.

SP3199 Care, Power, Information

Lecturer: Alexander Stingl

The 20th century was the century for which social scientists had described and analyzed an ongoing processes of "globalization". In the first two decades of the 21st century, it has become clear that we already have and continue to be living together on one single but increasingly "ruinous"/"ruined" planet (e.g. Anthropocene) and in an integrated and vulnerable planetary society (e.g. COVID), but simultaneously we also exist and dwell in one world that is "made of many worlds". Scholars, politicians, and activists propose unified responses to the processes that damage our one and very material World and that lead to various forms of injustice and inequality globally and across many different worlds through plans to "build back better" or establish "circular economies", as well as integrate digital technologies, ecosystem services, global health, and economic development policy, finance, and law. At the same time, much of social, cultural, and economic life has migrated away from so-called "meat-space" into digital realms. These different developments are, however, related: They beg the question how do we relate to one another and to the planet today? In this module, we will address this question through three connected register of how we relate to another as all these developments require the creation and the exchange of information (I), wherein different actors establish, circulate, and execute different forms of power (P), which enable as well as constrain, ultimately, how we care (C) for one another. Social scientists (political scientists and sociologists) not only study these three CPI registers traditionally, but with the increasingly global and local challenges we are now facing, the role of the social scientists and the demands made on them by individual and institutional stakeholders is significantly changing. In this module, not only will the above sketched questions and the theoretical and methodological tools to analyze them be addressed, but also will possible futures of scholarship be developed that establish how social scientists can play the role of a critical friend that brings stakeholders and vulnerable communities together across power and information through mutual established practices of care. In conclusion, the question will be addressed If there can or even must be such a thing as a "transnational welfare state".

SP3139: Comparative Government and Politics

Lecturers: Kevin Leyden, Sarah Jenkins

This module aims to provide a comparative introduction to contemporary systems of government and the politics of states around the world. It begins by analysing the major traditions in comparative political science, comparing methodological approaches and identifying the central questions addressed in comparative research. It shall select examples of political institutions and governance from across the world in order to determine, for example, how universal certain domestic Irish political phenomenon are, what common causes they may share, and how different trajectories of political development are possible and why they occur. The module will give students a basic grasp of the comparative method, of its role in political science research, and of the usefulness of comparison in understanding our political environment. The module also intends to provide students with sufficient empirical knowledge to appreciate the diversity of political life, to situate the Irish Republic in a wider context - and to match generalised insights about the nature of political institutions and behaviour with sophisticated factual examples that illustrate variation and complexity.

Semi-Core module

SP405: Contemporary Social Thought

Lecturer: Diana Stypinska

While there is much diversity in contemporary social theory, one of its central characteristics is the focus on power. How is power enacted? How is it maintained? How can it be resisted? – these are just a few questions that continue to animate the discussions in social and political sciences alike.

Thinking about power systematically entails engagement with a range of key themes, such as, ‘social order’, ‘social knowledge’, ‘social divisions’ and ‘social change’, to name just a few. Taking these as its starting points, this module will introduce you to a variety of diverse contemporary social thinkers, exploring the ways in which they approach, investigate, and conceptualise ‘power’ in their work.

Each week, we will focus on the contributions of one specific social thinker, identifying and critically evaluating the uses and limitations of his/her concepts and approach, through their application to ongoing social issues. In so doing, the module will not only introduce you to the key concepts and debates in contemporary social theory, but also equip you with a wide range of ideas that will help you to make sense of, and critically engage with, our social worlds.

Prerequisites: None. Min./max. no. of students: Restrictions apply. Teaching and learning methods: Weekly in-person lectures.

Assessment: Mid-term essay 1500 words (30%) and end of semester exam (70%).

Language of instruction: English.

SP3137: Youth and Society

Lecturers: John Canavan, Cormac Forkan

This module provides learners with an opportunity to explore and critically analyse the position of childhood and youth from a sociological perspective. In the early part of the module, students will be introduced to theoretical perspectives on the phenomena of ‘childhood’ and ‘youth’, exploring how these concepts have varied across time and culture. Drawing on relevant theory and empirical research, learners will then engage in an in-depth analysis of a range of thematic issues within contemporary research on childhood and youth, including education, citizenship and political engagement, family life and relationships, and youth transitions to adulthood. On completion of this module, students will have knowledge and understanding of key theoretical perspectives on childhood and youth in society, be able to critically analyse the lives of children and youth in key areas of: education; citizenship and political engagement; family and peer relationships; youth transitions to adulthood and understand how social factors influence the life experiences and life chances of young people in childhood, youth and early adulthood.

Specialist Elective Modules Semester 2

SP3192: Sociology of Religion

Lecturer: Vesna Malesevic

The module is organized around the themes of how we sociologically understand and interpret the phenomenon of religion. The main emphasis is placed on the analysis of texts to encourage students to think sociologically about religion. We address the classical concepts of religion as well as contemporary theories, and discuss the social, political and cultural processes that affect transformation of religion and its institutions. We examine relationships between religion and other spheres of social life such as politics, gender, sexuality, and health.

SP3129: Sexualities, Genders and Diversities

Lecturers: Stacey Scriver

Contemporary societies can offer individuals different ways through which to experience sexuality and gender, to enact gender and sexual identities and to advocate for sexual and gender rights. But genders and sexualities continue to be contested and some gender and sexual expressions are marginalised and problematised. The objective of this module is to explore the construction, expression and management of diversity, gender and sexualities in contemporary societies, with a focus on Western Europe and North America. As an inter-disciplinary module incorporating sociology, politics, social work and gender and feminist theory, this course aims to stimulate students to rethink and re-evaluate typical/traditional understandings of the role and function of gender, sexuality and diversity. It also aims to develop students' analytical skills and critical language so students can question the gendered and normative world in which we live. Case studies that examine continuing exchanges between real-life sexualities and the contexts within which they are forged are integral to the course. The role of masculinities and femininities will be explored, particularly as they relate to economic, political and social inequalities for all genders, and how these are inscribed into, and sometimes challenged by, law and policy. Topics include mental health; relationships and consent; domestic, sexual and gender based violence; social construction of genders and sexualities; heterosexual, gay and lesbian and queer theories.

SP721 Ocean & Marine Politics

Lecturer: Brendan Flynn

This course explores some of the politics that happens at sea. In particular we will focus on the politics of fishing and marine renewable energy, and to a lesser extent we will look at conflicts over marine natural resources, disputes on marine boundaries, and the role of the state as regards all matters of the sea. The course explores various theoretical perspectives, in particular an emerging literature that stresses the 'social construction' of the sea, and the concept of 'resilience'. We will also examine methodological questions, or how should we study a politics of the seas? Here the focus is on exploring to what extent qualitative ethnographic methods can help shed understanding and context on complex marine based activities.

SP4131 Smart & Liveable Cities and Suburbs

Lecturer: Kevin Leyden

The year 2008 marked a turning point in global historical settlement patterns; for the first time in human history the majority of people now live in urban areas. By 2030, two-thirds of the world's population will be urban. This module explores the need to improve the way we plan and maintain our urban places in order to make them better for people and the planet. Three interrelated policy and business trends associated with urbanism are examined: Smart Cities, Liveable or Healthy Cities, and efforts to reduce the effects of car-dependent suburban sprawl. Each of these trends has importance for enhancing our quality of life and addressing climate change. Each also creates unique economic opportunities and public and social policy challenges. The course will critically examine these trends and their unique relevance internationally and for Ireland.

SP3218 Politics in practice - Art and Activism

Lecturer: Kevin Ryan

This module brings sociology into conversation with the field of socially-engaged art, focusing specifically on power relations. The writer and curator Nato Thompson offers a neat entry-point into the field of engaged-art when he proposes that socially-engaged artists share an awareness that 'living itself exists in forms that [can] be questioned, rearranged, mobilised and undone...Whatever has a form can be criticised, disintegrated, assembled' (Thompson 2012, p. 19). This is the approach taken in this module, focusing on artists and practices that aim to disrupt, transform, or reconfigure power relations. In the first part of the course, we explore the work of leading theorists in the field, thereby opening out key questions and issues concerning consensual versus antagonistic approaches, participation v spectatorship, and collaboration as co-production. In the remainder of the course, we will explore a selection of influential artists and projects that engage with relations of power.

SP420: Sociology of the Environment

Lecturer: Mike Hynes

This module explores the relationship between social, political transformation, and environmental change, focusing in particular on sustainability questions. It seeks to answer questions about whether, and to what extent, interactions between society and the environment in Ireland and elsewhere remain hidden and how political influences shape how they are perceived. The module also looks at urban planning, sustainable, and active transport options, and aims to assess the relationship between the urban and built environments and the crucial social life it sustains. The first two parts of the module give rise to questions about environmentalism as a form of social organisation and its contributions to contemporary debates on society-environment interactions and sustainability questions. The third part of the course examines social and political developments related to the rise of environmental movements in Ireland and worldwide. What are the basic tenets of environmentalism? And is there a 'sustainable way forward'? What are the choices facing us in the 21st century? Are there pathways to alternative futures that recognise the realities of the climate crisis?

SP618: Welfare Words: Key Words in Social Work and Social Welfare

Lecturer: Paul Michael Garrett

The aim of this course is to articulate and discuss a range of key words that are central to social work and social welfare. Such words, or phrases, include: 'adoption', 'empowerment', 'dependency', 'underclass', 'anti-social behaviour', 'therapy', 'care' and 'caring', 'social inclusion', 'customer' etc. Underpinning the Course is the understanding that such words, often highly contentious and subject to a range of differing interpretations, need to be examined in a critical way. In short, there is a need to try to situate such words in a sociological and political context. Moreover, words, such as these, are pivotal in terms of the experiences of those providing and receiving social work and social welfare services.

The first hour each week will comprise of a contribution from the Lecturer, followed by a seminar structured around a presentation from students. The Course does have not a set textbook, a range of sources will be recommended and a reading pack will be provided.

SP3194 Theories of Nationalism

Lecturer: Judith O'Connell

Whilst many would agree that nationalism is a loyalty or devotion to one's nation above all others, some theorists have asked how this affiliation comes into being. Is nationalism an innate natural emotion or is it a social construct? This course will examine the main contemporary theories of nationalism, analyse key concepts and discuss classical debates in the study of nationalism. We will analyse nationalism's emergence and endurance as a factor in modern politics and society. Topics covered include: nationalism and state-building, nationalism and economic modernization, nationalism and identity, by applying these theoretical perspectives to the contemporary experience of conflict in Northern Ireland and Israel/Palestine.

SP701 Children & Young People in Families Today

Lecturer: Carmel Devaney

This course is designed to give students an opportunity to explore some of the main issues which arise in relation to childhood, children and family life. The historical view of the triangular relationship between child, family and the state has been one where children were seen as the property of their parents. This notion has shifted, and the contemporary approach is to view the family as a community of individuals possessing specific rights; with children being accepted as rights bearers in themselves.

Students will have an opportunity to deconstruct notions of childhood in society with particular reference to policy developments in the Irish context in particular. Students will explore social issues affecting family life and focus on areas such as childhood, children's rights, child welfare. Current models of responding to the needs and wellbeing of vulnerable children and their families will also be explored and considered. This option will provide participants with the opportunity to critically assess the effects of current policy and legislation relating to children, and family life in Ireland.

SP3101: 'Community' – Significance & Change

Lecturer: Brian McGrath

'Community' remains an enduring, albeit contested, concept despite claims of its disappearance in the modern age. At the same time, globalisation, mobility, technology and a range of other phenomena have changed people's experiences and understandings of 'community'. The experience of changing community life will be located through significant critical themes, which include among others: belonging, conviviality, neighbourliness, place, identity and migration. The module will also examine cases of local conflicts and consensus-style development that shape and are shaped by interpretations of 'community'. Empirical cases will be drawn from a range of international studies to explore these issues and themes.

SP3103: European Union: Polity, Political Economy and International Role

Lecturer: Gerry Fitzpatrick

This course aims to analyse the 'European Project' – an 'Unidentified Political Object' – through a discrete combination of three approaches: those of Political Theory, Political Economy and International Relations

(IR). Students are not expected to be a priori theoretically au fait with academic scholarship in these three fields: you shall effectively be practically acquainted with and use political theory, political economy and IR ideas in analysing the various facets of the European Union (EU).

The course shall be taught in four parts: first, we shall examine critically the historical origins of the European Idea and its 1980s 're-launch'; secondly, we will try to understand what the EU actually is, what it represents in terms of the political theory of the State and legitimacy; thirdly, the origins, progress and problems of the political economy of the Euro shall be dissected; and finally, the global meaning, role and positioning of the EU shall be assessed. If structure is a function of purpose – what exactly is the purpose of the EU in the 21st century and how should it appear and work?

SP3198 Songs of Rebellion: Power, Resistance, and Affect

Lecturer: Diana Stypinska

This module explores the ways in which music operates as a means of challenging, disrupting, and resisting the social order. It encourages students to reflect on the relationship between art, power, and resistance by critically engaging with a wide range of 'protest' songs. To this end, the module critically analyses specific pieces of music through the application of a wide range of conceptual tools drawn from critical, decolonial, race, and feminist theories. It intends to advance students' sociological imagination by fostering the awareness of the value of the 'aesthetic dimension' as a means of dissensus, with a particular emphasis on the theme of social change.

SP3150 Teaching Methods for the Politics and Society Classroom

Lecturer: Lisa Walshe

This module aims to provide students with the ability to examine and critically engage with the Leaving Certificate subject 'Politics and Society'. It will provide students with clear knowledge and understanding of the subject specification, the strands of study and the topics of learning and discussion. It will give students the skills to identify and employ a range of materials, resources and teaching methodologies, which will allow them to effectively teach and engage with the subject. The module aims to provide students both with the skills and the confidence to provide a collaborative, participative and democratic learning environment for those studying the subject in a post primary school context.

SP3214 Biosociality and Bioeconomy: The Value(s) of Living Things

Lecturer: Alexander Stingl

Climate Change and the 'Anthropocene' present a challenge to every living being on the planet because the way we are living is not sustainable. The social sciences make a crucial contribution in helping understand and evaluate the various dimensions of "sustainability" that exist across different socio-cultural, techno-scientific, and political-economic responses to the Anthropocene. In this module, we will take a serious look at human to non-human relations in the context of the so-called Bio-Economy and explore alternatives that include indigenous communities' ways of living, interrogate complex environments wherein "values" include the interests of non-humans (ecosystems, animals, etc.), and we will investigate conflicts and opportunities arising from different "Western" and "non-Western" cultures. To do so, we will examine the concept of "(knowledge-based/circular) Bioeconomy", look at local socio-cultural and international legal conflicts surrounding food justice and farming, fishing communities, alternative energy, biotechnology patents, and genetically modified organisms to illustrate the "values" at stake. By investigating the above, we will respond to the question, whether a "global bioeconomy" should be an economic and techno-scientific response, such as the European Bioeconomy proposes, or if the idea of a Bioeconomy can and should be reformulated by diverse values as a socio-culturally and ecologically sustainable alternative.

SP3215 Security & World Affairs: People, Planet, Places

Lecturer: Evans Fanoulis

This specialist elective module provides students with a critical understanding of the contemporary security landscape, engaging with security as a concept and idea, a policy area, and an empirical reality. Students explore different contemporary security issues and how these relate to world affairs, thinking outside the box of mainstream security studies.

In more concrete terms, students will firstly look at traditional security questions related to conflict, war and international intervention, always with concrete empirical references to international politics. The module continues with the securitization of climate change, immigration, and health. The last part of the module examines the role of women in security and how development and security are interconnected.

The ultimate objective of this empirically-driven yet theory-informed module is for students to acquire a comprehensive understanding of what we call and perform as 'security' in international politics nowadays. To do so, students are expected to adopt a multi-perspectival approach in their study, considering how security refers not only to people but also to different places, contexts and the whole planet.

SP3213 Contemporary African Politics

Lecturer: Sarah Jenkins

This module will introduce students to some of the main debates and issues in contemporary African politics, exploring them within their historical, social and cultural contexts. Africa has often been neglected in the study of politics and international relations, and has been subject to media representations that dismiss it as a continent universally ravaged by conflict, state collapse, famine, and disease. This module seeks to challenge these perspectives. Recognising the diversity and heterogeneity of the African experience, the module will explore the factors that have influenced social, economic, and political trajectories across the continent, and will consider both the challenges and opportunities in Africa's contemporary domestic and international affairs. The module is organised along three central themes: a) colonial legacies and the nature of the contemporary African state; b) contemporary security and development challenges; and c) Africa's international relations. By the end of the module, students should have a broad understanding of the politics of Africa, and its position in global affairs.

SPL304 Women, Men and the Economy: Critical Explorations of Theory and Policy

Lecturer: Nata Duvvury

The COVID19 crisis has followed as the Irish economy was finally recovering from the 2008 financial crisis. The gains in employment made by women in the recovery phase have now been undermined as the COVID crisis has unfolded in the last year and half. The oscillation in women's employment poses a challenge to our understanding of the economy and society. Can we discern a shift from the implicit male breadwinner model of economic and social policy? If so, why does there continue to be marked differences in the experience of women and men in the economy with persistent wage differentials, occupational and sectoral segregation and unequal work-life balance? This module will explore a) feminist critique of mainstream economic models, b) the changing structure of economic activity, including social reproduction, and explanations for the persistence of gender inequalities in the labour market, and c) the implications of economic and social policies such as taxation, social welfare and employment policy.
